Edward VI (1547-1553), Third Period, Fine Silver Issue, 'Horseman' Crown, 1551, Southwark, (Under-Treasurer, Sir John Yorke), (m.m.) : EDVWARD ' : VI : D ' : G ' : AGL ' : FRANC ' : Z : hIBER ' : REX • King on horseback right, with date in Arabic numerals below horse, rev. : POSVI DEVM : A DIVTOR | E? • MEV? • (m.m.) : square-topped shield over long cross fourchée, small lys in first and fourth quarters, 30.21g, 3h, m.m. y [small on reverse] (Lingford dies A-unlisted; Rodney-Smith -; Barr -; Spink 2478; North 1933), slightly broad-struck and a trace off-centre, usual stress mark in fields, lightly cleaned but residually toned, scarcely fine at centres, better to peripheries, an excessively rare die combination with only two others recorded from this reverse die; unknown both to Lingford and Rodney-Smith Provenance The 'Eleutherios' Collection of English Coins Morton & Eden 75, 2 July 2015, lot 141 - minor flan cracks, about fine - £900 The cataloguer notes similarities to Lingford's reverse die 16 (vide: i. 1950 Sale, Lot 12 / ii. Glendining, 13 May 1992, lot 252* / iii. Glendining, 25-26 November 1981, lot 290*) and die 17 (vide: Sale, Lot 13 / Lockett 1895). However, it is clear from the positioning of the colon stops, the absence of any after POSVI and the 'small' mintmark after MEV': that this reverse die differs from both. In comparison with reverse die 3 (vide: Sale, Lot 5), the size of the reverse pyx-mark affords us a suitable parallel, but again suffers from minor punctuation differences. This unrecorded reverse die was not noted at its last public appearance, but has been recorded by a well-regarded industry expert on two other coins - (SJA 11, 8 May 2009, lot 51* - gilt and pierced, fine) and (Glendining, 9-10 December 1987, lot 551* - fine). D. Brown and C. H. Comber, writing in the BNJ 58 (1988, pp. 90-98), noted: "It is also interesting to compare the coinage portraits with the painted portraits of Elizabeth that have been studied by Strong. The early coin portraits were taken from life and are among the few extant portraits of the queen that date from the first decade of her reign. There is no reason to doubt that they are a true, even if flattering, likeness. But the later coinage portraits (busts 7-9), in common with the later painted portraits, show no signs of the queen's ageing features. They have become icons of the cult of the eternally youthful virgin queen. The move from likeness to icon is reflected in the move from simplicity to complexity - the exaggeratedly ornate clothing (symbolising majesty), the profusely free flowing hair (symbolising virginity) and the orb and sceptre (symbolising authority)." (x) PCGS VF30 | Charles II (1660-1685), Crown, 1664 XVI, on a small flan, second bust right, 'crooked' ties curving outwards, rev. crowned shields cruciform, nine strings to harp, lettered edge upwards, 6h (Bull 363a but incorrect regnal year given and seven strings not noted; ESC 28; Spink 3355), contact marked and flat to the highest points of the central devices, yet with a hint of tone in the fields, about very fine, in PCGS holder, graded VF20 (Cert. #45679836) Provenance LCA 177, 4 June 2022, lot 1374 Bull notes that there are many small variations of tie, and indeed on page 49 he illustrates four for the date 1662, but he correctly chooses not to give these separate numbers in his listing. For the 1664 he distinguishes two main types of tie, which he describes as 'twisted' and 'crooked', and he has decided these are different enough to justify their own numbers. Bull 362 has the 'twisted' tie and Bull 363a has the 'crooked' tie. He gives the first for 1664 XVI and the second for 1664 XV. This second regnal year is an error and should also read XVI. (This simple error has led to some imaginative cataloguing in recent months! - cf. Spink, Summer Auction, 7 July 2021, lot 220) ESC does not make such a distinction. The second bust is described simply as 'smaller than last and with curving tie to wreath.' There is a footnote which explains that the many small variations for both 1662 and 1664 are 'not sufficient to warrant their inclusion as major varieties'. All the 1664 currency Crowns are therefore ESC 28. Subject to 5% tax on Hammer Price in addition to 20% VAT on Buyer's Premium.

Kuchler, alongside other respected medallists of the 18th and 19th centuries, further interesting due to the array of military, civil and royal events and individuals commemorated, all with uniformly light brown and pleasingly lustrous fields, handsome extremely fine to uncirculated. The frame with some minor wear, mounted for suspension (13) John Rennie (1761-1821), Scottish civil engineer notable for designing bridges, canals, docks and warehouses and for his pioneering use of structural cast-iron. In 1806 preparations begun for the construction of Bell Rock Lighthouse off the coast of Angus, Scotland, commissioned by the Northern Lighthouse Board. The tower was designed and construction was overseen by fellow Scottish civil engineer Robert Stevenson (1772-1850). Rennie was appointed by the board to superintend Stevenson's execution of the work. However, the unique location of the lighthouse at sea and at a great distance from London made this job extremely impractical and largely defunct. However, after his death claims were made by Rennie's son, Sir John Rennie, that the lighthouse had in fact been 'designed and built' by his father. This claim was to result in great hostility between the two families, a relationship that had previously been one of friendship and professional rivalry only a generation earlier. Although, this claim would continue to circulate, subsequent literature, notably 'The World's Lighthouses Before 1820' by Stevenson's relation Dr Alan Stevenson has succeeded in cementing Stevenson's role as designer and engineer of the project. On the death of Rennie his life and work were commemorated in this medallic form by W. Bain in the high relief style of the day. While during Stevenson's own lifetime he was commemorated in sculptural form by Samuel Joseph. This work was installed in the lighthouse in 1829 and later engraved by J. Syme. Shadwell Dock 'Billy and Charley' Forgery, Lead Cast Medallion, c. 1857-70, crowned bust right, 1502 above, within border, rev. two standing figures, one holding a branch, within border, 76mm, 86.25g, with some areas of corrosion to surfaces, the suspension loop now detached and incomplete, otherwise very fine. During excavations made in 1858 for a new dock at Shadwell, some two thousand metal objects were discovered. These ultimately proved to have been made by two illiterate, but ingenious mud-rakers, William (Billy) Smith and Charles (Charley) Eaton. These items were subsequently sold through the antiques dealer William Edwards. Produced in their home on Rosemary Lane, Tower Hill, together Billy and Charley are believed to have created between 5,000 to 10,000 objects, ranging from medallions, daggers, vases, hollow figures and triptychs. The medallions are characterised by busts of kings and armed knights in low relief surrounded by sham inscriptions and frequently dated in Arabic numerals. These now notorious forgeries have been the subject of numerous articles right from their discovery and the subsequent criminal trial of their creators in August 1858. Most notably an example of the same design was illustrated in the Country Life article by the archaeologists Audrey and Ivor Noel Hume in 1955. Further Christopher Peel's 1966 article in Seaby's Coin and Medal Bulletin on the subject sought to categorise and greater understand these items. see BNJ, Vol. IV, 1908 Forgeries and Counterfeit Antiquities, Hull Museum Publication, No. 54. Second Treaty of Vienna, AE Medal, 1731, by J. Croker, GEORGIVS • II • D : G : MAG : BRI : FRA : ET • H : REX • F • D •, laureate bust left, rev. PRAESTAT • COMPOSERE, Neptune in his Marine car driven by four hippocamps commands tranquillity from the winds, FOEDVS • VIENNENSE M•DCC•XXXI in exergue in two lines, plain edge, 47mm, 43.26g (Eimer 523; MI ii 496/39; Harding 61 [in AR]), traces of light contact marking to the obverse field, with a red tone around the reverse devices, otherwise problem free to largely pleasingly brown fields, handsome very fine provenance Baldwin's, by private treaty - £120 A number of disagreements had arisen since the Treaty of Utrecht ended the war of the Spanish Succession (1701-1714). A treaty signed at Vienna, and mediated by George II, terminated these disputes and, in particular, restored a monopoly over trade with India to the English East India Company. This medal is interesting principally because of a late but fundamental change in the nature of Croker's work. The obverse has a standard portrait of George II, but the reverse was engraved in a fine baroque style, very different from Croker's earlier work which was based on a more restrained version of French classicism. Subject to 20% VAT on Buyer's Premium. For more information please view Terms and Conditions for Buyers.

The direct translation of Poilu is 'the hairy one'. The phrase came to be used as a nickname for regular French infantryman during the First World War, in the same way the name 'Tommy' became synonymous with British soldiers. The word carries the sense of the infantryman's typically rustic, agricultural background, and derives from the bushy moustaches many French soldiers grew. René Lalique (1860-1945) was a French jeweller, medallist, and glass designer known for his creations of glass art, perfume bottles, vases, jewellery, chandeliers, clocks, and automobile hood ornaments. The capture proved to be controversial in Britain, as it was alleged that both Vaughan and Rodney had personally benefited from the capture of the Island. During a fierce thirty-minute naval engagement the Dutch vice-admiral Willem Crul was mortally wounded and subsequently died, his body was then brought ashore and buried with full military honours. The event subsequently immortalised Crul as a national hero in his native Netherlands. Multiple artworks, including in medallic forms, were produced in his honour and to chastise the actions of the British. By October of 1781 the island was once again successfully seized by the Dutch from the British. Subject to 5% tax on Hammer Price in addition to 20% VAT on Buyer's Premium.

Silesia, Glogau, Karl Ludwig von Cocceji, Golden Jubilee AR Medal, 1802, by A Abramson, draped bust right, rev. eight lines of text in wreath, edge plain, 27.80g, 1h (Friedensburg/Seger 3724; Hoffman 194), speckled tone, otherwise lustrous, almost extremely fine, very rare. Cocceji gained fame through his marriage to the dancer Barbarina. The dancer, also known as the "Flying Goddess" by her admirers, was born in 1721 as Barbara Campanini in the northern Italian city of Parma. At the Teatro Farnese there, she received her dance training from the famous dancer Fossano. Early on, she was praised for her brilliant technique and expressive pantomime. From 1739, she celebrated her first successes at the Paris Opera and at the court of Louis XV, where various contemporary composers created ballet pieces especially for her. In the following years she made guest appearances on the most important European theatres. Friedrich II saw the Barbarina in Paris in 1743 and is said to have been so impressed by her beauty and charm that he wanted to take her to the Berlin Opera on the spot, and then hired her for the next one Season. But this threatened her fledgling relationship with the Scottish Lord Stuart Mackenzie. The couple fled to Venice to avoid the Berlin contract. But the Prussian king let his diplomatic connections play, and the dancer was finally brought to Berlin under military guard. Here she rose to become the undisputed diva of dance theatre. She was so popular that Friedrich allowed her to set her own fee. After all, she got 7,000 Reichstaler a year on five months' leave. The equally prominent court musician Carl Philipp Emanuel Bach, on the other hand, had to be satisfied with 300 Reichstaler. The clever Barbarina's palace became a magnet for artists and diplomats. In 1748, she fell out of favour with the king, with whom she was said to have had an affair. She had accepted her admirer Carl Ludwig von Cocceji's marriage proposal, which he made to her after a performance on the open stage. His father, the Prussian Grand Chancellor and judicial reformer Samuel von Cocceji, tried to prevent this inappropriate liaison and induced Friedrich to terminate the dancer's engagement. The Barbarina went to England, but soon returned to her lover, who was eventually jailed for 18 months. The couple had to secretly get married. Cocceji was exiled to Glogau in Silesia, the Barbarina who followed him was forced to sell her Berlin palace. The relationship lasted ten years, then the dancer separated from her husband; however, the divorce was not finalised until 1788. In 1789, King Friedrich Wilhelm II awarded her the title of Countess. On their estates in Barschau in Silesia, the Barbarina founded a monastery for impoverished noble ladies, which lasted until the First World War. Subject to 20% VAT on Buyer's Premium. Sweden, The Nobel Laureate Prize for Physics, 1979, An Official Replica Gilt Medal, 1979, by the Mint of Pakistan, after E. Lindberg for the Kungliga Svenska Vetenskapsakademien [Royal Swedish Academy of Sciences, 1902] and as awarded to Abdus Salam, who shared the award for his contribution to the electroweak unification theory, the first Pakistani or Muslim to receive a Nobel Prize in Science, bust of Alfred Nobel left dividing legends, reverse with robed female figures representing Science and Nature, the former holding a scroll and raising a veil over the head of the latter, who holds a cornucopia, tablet below named (A. Salam MCMLXXIX), edge stamped 'Replica Made by[Pakistan] Mint', 66mm, 88.40g, large test cut and damage from two to three o'clock, worn and cleaned, the edge defaced in part, extremely unusual and historic thus fine. Perhaps the best biography is offered by the Nobel Prize website: 'Abdus Salam was born in Jhang, a small town in what is now Pakistan, in 1926. His father was an official in the Department of Education in a poor farming district. His family has a long tradition of piety and learning. When he cycled home from Lahore, at the age of 14, after gaining the highest marks ever recorded for the Matriculation Examination at the University of the Punjab, the whole town turned out to welcome him. He won a scholarship to Government College, University of the Punjab, and took his MA in 1946. In the same year he was awarded a scholarship to St. John's College, Cambridge, where he took a BA (honours) with a double First in mathematics and physics in 1949. In 1950 he received the Smith's Prize from Cambridge University for the most outstanding pre-doctoral contribution to physics. He also obtained a PhD in theoretical physics at Cambridge; his thesis, published in 1951, contained fundamental work in quantum electrodynamics which had already gained him an international reputation. Salam returned to Pakistan in 1951 to teach mathematics at Government College, Lahore, and in 1952 became head of the Mathematics Department of the Punjab University. He had come back with the intention of founding a school of research, but it soon became clear that this was impossible. To pursue a career of research in theoretical physics he had no alternative at that time but to leave his own country and work abroad. Many years later he succeeded in finding a way to solve the heartbreaking dilemma faced by many young and gifted theoretical physicists from developing countries. At the ICTP, Trieste, which he created, he instituted the famous "Associateships" which allowed deserving young physicists to spend their vacations there in an invigorating atmosphere, in close touch with their peers in research and with the leaders in their own field, losing their sense of isolation and returning to their own country for nine months of the academic year refreshed and recharged. In 1954 Salam left his native country for a lectureship at Cambridge, and since then has visited Pakistan as adviser on science policy. His work for Pakistan has, however, been far-reaching and influential. He was a member of the Pakistan Atomic Energy Commission, a member of the Scientific Commission of Pakistan and was Chief Scientific Adviser to the President from 1961 to 1974. Since 1957 he has been Professor of Theoretical Physics at Imperial College, London, and since 1964 has combined this position with that of Director of the ICTP, Trieste. For more than forty years he has been a prolific researcher in theoretical elementary particle physics. He has either pioneered or been associated with all the important developments in this field, maintaining a constant and fertile flow of brilliant ideas. For the past thirty years he has used his academic reputation to add weight to his active and influential participation in international scientific affairs. He has served on a number of United Nations committees concerned with the advancement of science and technology in developing countries. To accommodate the astonishing volume of activity that he undertakes, Professor Salam cuts out such inessentials as holidays, parties and entertainments. Faced with such an example, the staff of the Centre find it very difficult to complain that they are overworked. He has a way of keeping his administrative staff at the ICTP fully alive to the real aim of the Centre - the fostering through training and research of the advancement of theoretical physics, with special regard to the needs of developing countries. Inspired by their personal regard for him and encouraged by the fact that he works harder than any of them, the staff cheerfully submit to working conditions that would be unthinkable here at the International Atomic Energy Agency in Vienna (IAEA). The money he received from the Atoms for Peace Medal and Award he spent on setting up a fund for young Pakistani physicists to visit the ICTP. He uses his share of the Nobel Prize entirely for the benefit of physicists from developing countries and does not spend a penny of it on himself or his family. Abdus Salam is known to be a devout Muslim, whose religion does not occupy a separate compartment of his life; it is inseparable from his work and family life. He once wrote: "The Holy Quran enjoins us to reflect on the verities of Allah's created laws of nature; however, that our generation has been privileged to glimpse a part of His design is a bounty and a grace for which I render thanks with a humble heart."
