(x) Sri Lanka (Ceylon), Kingdom of Kandy (c. 1550-1765), silver Fanams (9), similar in design to Viraraya fanams of south India (cf. Codrington, p.175, 168), generally little circulated, extremely fine (9)A Gentleman's Collection of Sri Lankan Coins - Part IIICodrington describes these as "Sinhala panama, struck by the king. The metal is silver, often very base, and sometimes hardly distinguishable from copper; a few show a slight admixture of gold, from which it may be inferred that this coin has been gradually debased from an original gold fanam, ... in documents they are mentioned last, as far as I can ascertain, in 1765. The design is that of the Malabar Viraraya fanam."Subject to 5% tax on Hammer Price in addition to 20% VAT on Buyer's Premium.

Lot 9668

Nepal, Kingdom of Kathmandu, Lakshminarasimha, (1619-1641), Tanka, imitating prototypes issued by Ala-ud-Din Muhammad Shah Khilji (1605-1639), undated, Sri Sri in central circle, mace above, rev. lion crouching on top of elephant, in two interlacing squares, Kalasa below, 10.07g (Rhodes, Nepal 215-216; RGV 188), softly struck and a hairline die crack at 11 o'clock, fine, very scarce. The Klaus Bronny Collection of Bhutanese and Nepalese Coins. Metallurgical analysis reveals a reading of: Cu 67.74% Ag 23.41% Zn 8.65% Ga 0.20%. This is consistent with previous analysis noted by Rhodes et al (1989), who states, 'one coin has been analysed as only 20 per cent silver; the other specimens appear slightly finer, although still very debased.' Nepal, Anonymous, Tanka, imitating prototypes issued by Ala-ud-Din Muhammad Shah Khilji, (1605-1639), undated, Sri Sri in central circle, rev. crouching lion in two intersecting squares, dorje above, 7.18g (RGV 204), crudely struck and with deposits in fields, fine, scarce; Anonymous, Tanka, imitating prototypes issued by Ala-ud-Din Muhammad Shah Khilji, (1605-1639), undated, trident, sword with garland above, rev. trident with crescent and dot on each side, 8.91g (Rhodes, Nepal 244; RGV 219), lightly pitted surfaces, fine, scarce (2). The Klaus Bronny Collection of Bhutanese and Nepalese Coins. i) Although the design of this piece indicates that it was probably struck to circulate as a tanka, this specimen alongside one housed in the British Museum, has been analysed revealing them to have no silver in them at all. It is probably the very final debasement of the tanka series, struck in the mid or late AD 1630s. Metallurgical analysis: Cu 67.74% Ag 23.41% Zn 8.65% Ga 0.20% ii) Rhodes et al (1989) noted that coins of this type are normally so debased that they appear to be made of brass. (x) Nepal, Kingdom of Kathmandu, Jaya Pratap Malla (1641-1674), 'Square' Double Mohar, NS 781 (1661), trident, rev. sword, 20.47g (Rhodes, Nepal 287; RGV 258; KM 166), ex mount and rubbed, yet toned, about very fine and rare; Mohar, NS 775 (1655), imitation Persian characters, rev. imitation Persian characters, with date, 5.24g (Rhodes, Nepal 290; RGV 260; KM 164), toned with some softening, very fine; Mohar (2) NS 761 (1641), 4.64g; 5.44g (Rhodes, Nepal 288; RGV 259; KM 163), some softened details, about very fine; Suki, NS 769 (1649), trident, rev. legend in three lines, 1.40g (RGV 262 Rhodes, Nepal 294), flat in parts, about very fine (5)The Klaus Bronny Collection of Bhutanese and Nepalese CoinsThe 'Square' Double Mohar was inspired by a rupee of the Mogul Emperor Jahangir of the Agra mint. It is the only double Mohar struck during the Malla period. The date NS 781 corresponds to 1661, which marks 20 years of rule of Pratap Malla.The sword (khga) which features on many coins of Nepal has a particular cultural significance in Nepal: Manjushri (also known as a boddhisvattva of wisdom), drained the lake which once filled the Kathmandu valley by cutting the mountain with his sword at a place near Chobar. The city of Kathmandu originally had the shape of a sword. Swords used as weapons normally had double cutting edges, and this type of symmetrical sword is represented on the Nepalese coins. Pratap was proud of his artistic achievements and this Arabic imitation Mohar is certainly a beautifully produced type, copied from one of the finest Agra rupees of Jahangir. In contemporary documents coins of this type are known as 'Kavindramallitanka', presumably specified because of its fine standard of production.Subject to 5% tax on Hammer Price in addition to 20% VAT on Buyer's Premium.

(x) Nepal, Kingdom of Kathmandu, Chakravartendra Malla (1669), Mohar, NS 789 (1669), Sri 2 Jaya Chakrava, conch and wheel, a bow to right and five arrows left, rev. rtendra Malla Deva 789, elephant goad and noose in triangle, 5.44g (Rhodes, Nepal 296; RGV 264; KM 173), some softness, otherwise toned in the fields, good very fine. The Klaus Bronny Collection of Bhutanese and Nepalese Coins. See the following reference to this coin by Wright: History of Nepal, Translated from, Parabatiya, 3rd ed. Calcutta, 1966, p. 149. "By one Swami's (mendicant) vice Pratapa Malla of Kathmandu left his throne for a time to be filled in turn by his four sons, for one year each (during ca. A.D. 1668). Chakravartendra Malla's coin, devised by this Swami, consists of a triangular Banastra (bow and arrow), Pasha (a noose), Ankush (the iron hook for driving an elephant), Kamal (a lotus), Chamar (a yak's tail), and Sambat 789 (A.D. 1669). This vice caused his death." Wright comments on this as follows: "A bow and arrow are ominous of death, but, nevertheless, the water in which such a coin is dipped possesses the quality of causing a speedy delivery in child-bed. These coins, which are very rare, are still used for this purpose." What Wright describes as Chamar (yak tail or fly whisk) is better identified as a mace on the coin. One should note that the four emblems conch, wheel, mace and lotus flower are normally associated with the Hindu god Vishnu, while the elephant go and the noose are emblems related to the elephant-headed god Ganesh. According to Milan Ratna Shakya this coin type is known as Nythuban because of the five arrows (Shakya, Milan Ratna: "Ganesa Yantra. Medieval Silver coins". Mudraa Journal of Nepal Numismatic Society, No. 2, Kathmandu, March 2010, p. 28-30). Subject to 5% tax on Hammer Price in addition to 20% VAT on Buyer's Premium.

(x) Nepal, Kingdom of Kathmandu, Jaya Mahipatendra Malla (c. 1669), Mohar, undated [circa 1669], Sri 2 Jaya Mahipa, trident in lozenge, rev. tendra | Malla | Deva, sword with wreath, 5.40g (Rhodes, Nepal 300, RGV 266; KM 177), cleaned to the reverse, yet the obverse toned and centrally struck, a very fine example of the Malla period's only undated Mohur, thus very rare. The Klaus Bronny Collection of Bhutanese and Nepalese Coins. This is the only undated Mohar of the Malla period. Rhodes et al. suggest 1669 as the most likely date of issue. In that year the brother of Mahipatendra had died after being the nominal king for only a short period. Jaya Pratap Malla, who had gone on a pilgrimage to India, may have allowed this coin to be struck in honour of his son. This is one of the most attractive Malla mohars; the obverse design was copied in Tibet to produce one variety of the rare Shri Mangalamtangka, which is probably the first silver coin to be struck in Tibet. He was the only minister to place his name on the coins of the Kingdom. He died two years later in 1690. Rhodes et al. (1987) remarked that the Mohurs RGV 281 and RGC 282 are the earliest Malla coins which feature eight petals containing the astamangala emblems near the rim of the coin. Coins with this device were very popular in Tibet because of the Buddhist symbolism and also because the eight petals could be used as a guideline when cutting the coins into fractions in order to obtain small change. However, so far, fraction of Mohars of Bhupalendra have not been found in Tibet. The Sukis were struck in the name of Riddhi Lakshmi, the mother of Bhupalendra, and who became Regent for her son during his minority. Bhupalendra ascended the throne at the tender age of eight and died aged only twenty in 1700 while on pilgrimage in Ayodhya. In order to provide small change a system of cutting the Nepalese mohars was developed. The fractions produced were 1 Sho, 7.5 and 5 Karma (or sKar-ma). Mohars with eight petals on the reverse were used and as a result counting the number of petals became the way to determine the denomination created. Five petals became a Sho, four petals a 7.5 Skar and three petals a 5 Skar. Over time the centre of these coins were also removed and used to provide payment to the blacksmiths who cut these coins. In that way the customer did not lose as his two pieces, petals and centre, were worth as much as the whole coin; ultimately creating something out of nothing. The coins most commonly cut were the mohar of Jaya Prakash Malla of Kathmandu dated NS 856 and the debased silver mohars of Pratap Simha Saha dated 1697 to roughly 1699. Lot 9743

(x) Sikkim, Coinage of Nepalese Traders (1883-1885), AE Paisa (3), dates not visible, Sri Sri Sri Sikimapati Maharaj, rev. Sri Sri Sri Sikima Sarkara, 5.01g; 5.37g; 6.12g (KM 1; 3) crudely struck as common for types, fine to very fine, all scarce (3)The Klaus Bronny Collection of Bhutanese and Nepalese CoinsThere was no local coinage in Sikkim until the arrival of a number of Nepalese traders in the late 19th century. The Nepalese Pradhan brothers acquired some land and also the right to mine copper. Some of this copper they wished to use for striking coins which they hoped they could use for trade with Nepal and the Darjeeling area. The coins, often poorly struck, are similar to contemporary Nepalese copper coins, except for the Sikkim legend. They were struck between 1883 and 1885. The dies bore dates but few of the coins show the date clearly. Parts of a date can be seen on a couple of the present coins. The weights of the issues vary between 4 and 6g. Some coins have the obverse legend in 3 lines, others in 4 lines. This coin issue was not a success as neither the British nor the Nepalese allowed their circulation within their respective jurisdictions.Subject to 5% tax on Hammer Price in addition to 20% VAT on Buyer's Premium.
