(5) Provenance The Little Busby Hoard of Roman Denarii, found at Little Busby, North Yorkshire, on 2 June 2021 [PAS YORYM-B64A28] Here, the hoard reaches the post-quinquennial period, following Hadrian's fifth year as Emperor, and the adoption of a curt new obverse inscription, HADRIANVS AVGVSTVS. Removing the earlier references to dynastic continuity, Hadrian ties his name to that of the first Princeps in a bold statement of legitimacy. Subject to 20% VAT on Buyer's Premium. Provenance The Little Busby Hoard of Roman Denarii, found at Little Busby, North Yorkshire, on 2 June 2021 [PAS YORYM-B64A28] In delaying his adoption of the Pater Patriae moniker, denoted as P P on his coinage, Hadrian is said to have done so in conscious imitation of Augustus, who similarly delayed his adoption of the title until 2 BC. The new obverse inscription bearing the title also coincides with a reduction of die sizes for denarii, noticeable in comparison to the larger aurei of the period.
