(x) The Royal Bank of Scotland plc, Scotland, Unissued pair of Front and Back essays on card for £1, 4th January 1987, serial number A/11 000000, A Rare Pre-Issuance Essay Set Featuring Both Front and Back Designs with Unused SignatureThis exceptional pre-issuance essay set, dated 4th of January 1987, features the exact front and back designs which would later be approved and adopted for circulation beginning on the 25th March 1987. The front and back are printed separately, reflecting a stage when the note's final appearance was nearing approval.It is important to highlight that the essays in this lot bear the signature of Chief Executive Charles Winter, whereas the first issued notes for circulation were signed by Managing Director Maiden. This distinction is significant.The first series of the Campbell Issues, dated 25th March 1987, were signed by the Managing Director. Later, a second series of Campbell Issues was issued on 13th December 1988, and these notes bear the signature of the Chief Executive—not Winter, but Maiden—who succeeded him.Charles Winter served as Chief Executive of the Royal Bank of Scotland Group from 1985 to 1992, following a distinguished career that began in 1949. He played a key role in a period of major transformation, including the integration of Williams & Glyn's Bank and the expansion into international markets.This essay set, combining an early date, a finalised design, and the signature of a high-ranking official whose signature is not found on this design's issued notes, offers a rare and fascinating insight into the note production process and leadership transitions during a pivotal moment in the bank's history.(Pick 346, 351 for types, date unlisted), mounted on cardboardSubject to 5% tax on Hammer Price in addition to 20% VAT on Buyer's Premium.

Lot 381

(x) Imperial Bank of Persia, specimen 100 Tomans, ND (1890-1923), serial number range J 05601 - J/A 00100, the Imperial Bank of Persia first series commenced in 1890, and each denomination from the 1 Toman to the 1000 Toman note was assigned a single capital letter in alphabetical order (excluding 'I' to avoid confusion with the numeral 1). The prefix letter initially assigned to the 100 Toman was the letter J, with this single-letter prefix system being employed until circa 1903. However, the increasing demand for banknotes prompted the introduction of split prefix letters on all denominations after 1903, excluding the 1000 Toman note. The original alphabetical sequence persisted, but now additional letters were appended to the original ones, starting with "A". The new initial prefix for the 100 Tomans of the notes printed after 1903 was J/A. The particular specimen note we bring for sale marks the transition between these systems, marked with the special serial number range J 05601 - J/A 00100. This specimen was part of a limited run of only 4500 notes and provides an example of the few notes issued for each date. Only 17500 copies of 100 Toman note were printed over a period of 20 years from 1890 to 1910, with 10000 more banknotes printed from 1910 until 1924 when the prefix letters changed again, assigning the 100 Toman notes a new prefix letter "X". Despite the fact that this note is undated, with this knowledge we can approximate the timeframe of this specimen to belong to the period circa 1903-1910 (Pick 8s, BNB 110), in PMG holder 58 Choice About Uncirculated, printer's annotation, an incredible note showcasing transition of prefixes. Historically significant and rare. Subject to 5% tax on Hammer Price in addition to 20% VAT on Buyer's Premium.

Lot 426

Government of Iraq, 1 Dinar, L. 1931 (ND 1941), serial number E/5 243184, the Nasik Security Printing Press, established in 1928 in Nasik (now often spelled "Nashik"), Maharashtra, India, was a critical asset in the Government of India's currency and security printing operations. Originally set up by the colonial government to meet India's increasing need for currency and secure documents, Nasik's reputation quickly grew due to its reliability, security features, and high production standards, essential for handling complex and secure printing tasks. During World War II, the press played a notable role in producing currency for Iraq. As wartime logistics severely impacted the regular currency supply routes between Britain and Iraq, the Iraq Currency Board needed an alternative source for banknotes. To meet this demand, British authorities looked to Nasik, which, being part of the British Empire at the time, could respond promptly to this emergency need. Between 1941 and 1945, the Nasik Press printed Iraqi currency in denominations of 100 Fils (only 1 note known), 1/4, 1/2, and 1 dinar. These banknotes were essential in stabilising the Iraqi economy amid the disruptions caused by the war, especially as military expenditures in the region surged and local currency shortages became critical. Nasik's ability to produce these emergency banknotes underscored its adaptability and importance within the Commonwealth's broader network of secure printing facilities. The notes produced for Iraq featured distinct characteristics differentiating them from those typically printed in the UK. For instance, the Nasik notes printed to Iraq lacked the usual watermark and printer's imprint. Instead, they carried unique design elements aligned with the Iraqi series but were distinguishable by the fractional serial number prefix (Letter E). Additionally, the Nasik Press faced the unique challenge of not having specimen signatures from the Iraq Currency Board on hand; thus, the Iraqi Minister of Finance and Justice, Ibrahim Kamal, provided his signature, while Mr. L. M. Swan, the Currency Officer, signed on behalf of the Board. Nasik's role in producing emergency currency for Iraq demonstrated its strategic importance within the British Empire's wartime economy, ensuring currency stability under adverse conditions. The successful collaboration with Iraq became part of Nasik's legacy in secure printing, showcasing its reliability in times of international crisis. (x) Lietuvos Bankas, Lithuania, specimen 10 litu, 16th February 1938, no serial number, Lithuania - 10 Litu, 1938 Commemorative Banknote Designed by Adomas Galdikas | Printed by Bradbury Wilkinson & Co., New Malden, England Among the most evocative and poignant banknotes of pre-war Europe, the Lithuania 10-litu commemorative issue of 1938 stands not simply as a rare unissued note, but as a condensed visual expression of national pride, identity, and political fragility. Commissioned to honour the 20th anniversary of Lithuania's independence, this remarkable banknote represents both a celebration and, unwittingly, a farewell - the last expression of sovereign Lithuanian currency before the country was swept into the totalitarian tide of the 20th century. The note was designed by Adomas Galdikas (1893-1969), one of Lithuania's most celebrated modernist artists, stage designers, and graphic innovators. Galdikas had studied in Saint Petersburg and later in Western Europe, absorbing influences from Expressionism and Art Deco, which he translated into a distinctly Lithuanian visual idiom. His work is marked by bold lines, monumental figures, and an intense reverence for national symbolism. By the 1930s, Galdikas was professor of painting at the Kaunas Art School and had become the official artistic voice of the state. The 10-litu banknote is one of his crowning achievements - a carefully orchestrated synthesis of history, myth, and statehood rendered through a modernist lens. The banknote was printed by the renowned security printers Bradbury Wilkinson & Co. in England, celebrated for their precision and artistic quality. Production was completed, and the notes were likely delivered to Lithuania by the end of 1938. However, although intended for circulation, the note never entered public hands. The outbreak of World War II in September 1939, followed by the Soviet occupation of Lithuania on 15 June 1940, brought the entire process to a halt. The Bank of Lithuania was swiftly dissolved and transformed into a local branch of the State Bank of the USSR, and by 21 March 1941, the circulation of the litas was officially banned, and all remaining Lithuanian banknotes were destroyed by incineration, erasing the last tangible expressions of the country's monetary independence. Thus, this banknote - although printed, packaged, and fully prepared for release - remained unissued. It was not intended as a ceremonial piece; rather, it became a casualty of history, a ghost of a nation on the brink of erasure... The note's design is a masterclass in patriotic iconography and political narrative. The obverse features a commanding portrait of Antanas Smetona (1874-1944), the first and last president of interwar Lithuania. A lawyer, journalist, and political thinker, Smetona was among the key figures who drafted and signed the 1918 Act of Independence. After a brief initial presidency, he returned to power following a military coup in 1926, establishing an authoritarian regime that, despite its suppression of political opposition, preserved national independence during a time of increasing regional instability. Smetona sought to steer Lithuania through the dangerous tides of Nazi Germany and the Soviet Union but was ultimately unable to prevent occupation. He fled to Germany in June 1940, and later to the United States, where he died in exile in 1944. Flanking his portrait are the Columns of Gediminas, a symbol of Lithuania's medieval glory under the Gediminid dynasty - a reminder of the state's deep historical roots in European affairs. Adjacent to it lies a depiction of the 1918 Act of Independence, the document that restored Lithuania's sovereignty after 123 years under Russian Imperial rule. Above all presides the Coat of Arms of Lithuania, with the Vytis, the armoured knight on horseback, sword drawn - a centuries-old emblem of resistance, movement, and national defence. The Vytis was not only a heraldic image but a visual mission statement: Lithuania would always ride forward, sword raised, to protect its freedom. The reverse of the note continues this historical narrative with portraits of the 20 members of the Council of Lithuania (Lietuvos Taryba) - the body formed in 1917 that authored and proclaimed the Act of Independence the following year. The inclusion of each council member's likeness makes this one of the rare banknotes to feature not a single head of state, but a full collective of founders, offering a democratic image of national genesis even as the real political system in 1938 had shifted to one-man rule. Surrounding these figures are the coats of arms of three central Lithuanian cities: - Vilnius, the spiritual and historic capital, shown through Saint Christopher carrying the infant Jesus across a river, a nod to the city's role as a bridge between East and West - and an allusion to protection and endurance; - Kaunas, represented by a bull bearing a cross on its forehead, served as the temporary capital during the interwar period, embodying pragmatism, resilience, and administrative centrality; - and Klaipeda, symbolised by two towers and a city gate, reflecting its status as the key Baltic port and its contested history - it had been under German control until Lithuania seized it in 1923, integrating it into the Republic. In 1938, Lithuania was at a crossroads. While politically dominated by Smetona's authoritarian regime, the country was still relatively stable and economically self-reliant. Lithuania had developed a robust agrarian economy, with grain, flax, and dairy exports as major sources of income. Culturally, there was a strong movement to preserve the Lithuanian language, folklore, and identity, especially after long periods of Russification under the Tsarist regime. Cities like Kaunas saw growth in modern architecture, the arts, and education. However, tension simmered beneath the surface. Relations with Poland remained strained over the status of Vilnius, and pressure from Nazi Germany over Klaipeda (Memel) was intensifying. In March 1939, Germany annexed Klaipeda - a psychological blow to Lithuania's pride and a sign that darker days were coming. That darker future arrived abruptly. Following the Molotov-Ribbentrop Pact of August 1939, Lithuania was consigned to the Soviet sphere of influence. Soviet troops entered in 1940 under the guise of military agreements, but in practice, the country was forcibly annexed into the USSR. The national government was dissolved, political leaders arrested or exiled, and within months, Soviet rubles replaced the litas. A great silence fell over the idea of Lithuanian sovereignty - one that would last fifty years, until independence was finally restored in 1990. This note, then, is not simply a banknote that never circulated. It is the final breath of a free Lithuania before the long Soviet occupation. It is both a commemoration and a funeral shroud, a printed hope that was locked away before it could fulfil its purpose. Each surviving example is a relic of extraordinary rarity, a visual capsule of a nation's interrupted journey. Collectors do not simply acquire this note - they inherit a story of triumph, fragility, and unresolved promise. To study it is to enter the mind of a people who, despite hardship and historical interruption, envisioned a future built upon the courage of their past. The 1938 10-litu commemorative note is not merely a collectible. It is Lithuania's final independent word before silence. These notes were produced as part of early conceptual designs for a national currency following Namibia's transition to sovereignty and its expected entry into the Commonwealth of Nations. Unlike the more commonly recorded essays bearing the name Namibia Reserve Bank, these particular examples are distinguished by the absence of any issuing authority, making no reference to a central bank. Instead, they simply feature the name Republic of Namibia, along with denominations expressed in Kalahars — a proposed currency unit that was ultimately never adopted. All inscriptions appear solely in English, without the bilingual format found in other proofs. The designs are closely related — and stylistically similar — to the so-called “1990 Unadopted Designs,” which have been documented. However, these notes are clearly a distinct variant, both in their minimal inscriptions and their presentation. While the Namibian dollar was eventually adopted as the official currency, these proof notes remain as compelling reminders of an alternate monetary path that was considered during a pivotal moment in the nation's history. Rare and historically important, this group offers unique insight into the early concepts behind Namibia's post-independence currency system. (Pick unlisted), all in PCGS holders, 69PPQ Superb Gem New (1), 68PPQ Superb Gem New (7), 67PPQ Superb Gem New (1), (total 9 notes) Subject to 5% tax on Hammer Price in addition to 20% VAT on Buyer's Premium.

Lot 669

(x) De Javasche Bank. Netherlands Indies, Specimen 25 Gulden, 1963, serial number range AA12345 - AA67890, This 25 Gulden specimen note, is a striking artifact from the era of the De Javasche Bank, an institution that played a crucial role in the financial systems of the Dutch East Indies. This note, with its printed date of “32 -9 - 1963”, was never intended for circulation. The date itself is a deliberate impossibility—no calendar can feature a 32nd day of any month—making this an unmistakable specimen intended to demonstrate the design, not for use as legal tender. Additionally, the note is perforated with the cancellation “43 - 5 - 68”, further marking it as a post-closure demonstration piece. These deliberate and visible anomalies ensure there can be no confusion with actual currency. The De Javasche Bank was established in 1828 to serve as the central bank of the Dutch East Indies, issuing all paper currency in the colony and controlling monetary policy. The 25 Gulden note, while not among the highest denominations in circulation, would have been a significant sum for many during its era. The note's value would place it in the hands of merchants, traders, and those engaged in substantial financial transactions—indicating the currency's important role in facilitating the economic exchanges of the colonial system. The design of this note is both practical and artistic, bearing inscriptions in Dutch, Malay, Javanese, and Chinese. This multilingual aspect reflects the diverse, multi-ethnic society of the Dutch East Indies, where various groups coexisted under colonial rule. The visual elements of the note follow the refined engraving style typical of De Javasche Bank issues, with intricate security features designed to prevent counterfeiting. De Javasche Bank's role was not just as a bank, but also as a symbol of Dutch colonial authority. It controlled the currency supply, facilitated trade in valuable natural resources like rubber and coffee, and supported the Dutch colonial infrastructure. However, after the Japanese occupation during World War II and the Indonesian independence struggle, the bank's role drastically changed. In 1953, following Indonesia's independence, De Javasche Bank was nationalized, and its role as the central bank was taken over by Bank Indonesia. This 25 Gulden specimen from 1963 stands as a relic of a time when the Dutch East Indies were still fresh in the memories of many, even as the region transitioned into the independent nation of Indonesia. While never circulated, its continued production after the closure of De Javasche Bank serves as a fascinating reflection on the enduring legacy of colonial institutions, as well as the political and economic shifts of the time. This specimen captures a moment in history, frozen in time and marked with impossible dates and cancellations, offering a glimpse into the complex relationship between the colonial powers and the growing independence movements in Southeast Asia. When viewed alongside the later 1000 Gulden specimen, issued in 1968 and presented in the next lot, this 25 Gulden note becomes part of a fascinating pair of post-closure specimens that document the final years of De Javasche Bank's existence. Both notes were intended for archival purposes and never circulated, but together they offer a rare insight into a bygone era and the intricate role currency played in the shifting political landscape of the Dutch East Indies and the new Republic of Indonesia. Lot 708

(x) Banco de Portugal, 500 Escudos, Ch.2, 17th November 1922, serial number 1D04429, Artur Virgílio Alves dos Reis, was the Greatest Swindler in Portuguese History. Born in Lisbon on September 8, 1896, is a name that resonates deeply in the financial history of Portugal, remembered as the architect of one of the most daring and complex scams of the 20th century. Alves dos Reis's life is a fascinating tale of ambition, cunning, and audacity, culminating in a fraud that shook the Portuguese economy and had lasting political consequences. Born into a modest family, Alves dos Reis showed from a young age a keen mind for business and a remarkable ability to deceive. He attended the School of Engineering in Lisbon but did not complete his studies. Determined to achieve success, he forged an engineering degree from the prestigious University of Oxford. This forgery was the first step in a series of frauds that would make him infamous. In the 1920s, Alves dos Reis began to build his fraudulent career in Angola. Using his forged degree, he secured an important position at the Companhia de Caminhos de Ferro de Angola. With cunning and accounting manipulations, he embezzled significant funds from the company. This scheme earned him a considerable fortune and allowed him to perfect his skills in financial fraud. Additionally, he forged stock certificates and manipulated documents to appropriate resources from investors. The pinnacle of Alves dos Reis's criminal career was the audacious scam against the Banco de Portugal in 1925. Using forged documents, he convinced the renowned British note-printing firm Waterlow and Sons to print 200,000 500-escudo notes, under the pretext of financing a development project in Angola. Reis created the fictitious "Companhia de Moçambique e Angola" as a front for the scam, drafting an apparently legitimate contract with forged signatures of senior Banco de Portugal officials. With this, he managed to have Waterlow and Sons print the notes, which were indistinguishable from the real ones. The fraud was executed so perfectly that Alves dos Reis managed to put the notes into circulation without immediate suspicion. He used the money to acquire stakes in companies, banks, and properties, trying to legitimise his newly acquired wealth. At one point, he controlled several financial institutions, including the Banco Angola e Metrópole, through which he planned to create a financial monopoly. Moreover, Alves dos Reis and his accomplices opened accounts in foreign banks, facilitating the transfer and laundering of money. They purchased real estate, businesses, and even shares in Banco de Portugal, attempting to influence the institution from within. The magnitude of the scam was such that, for a brief period, Alves dos Reis was seen as an influential businessman and respected philanthropist. The discovery of the scam began when Banco de Portugal noticed an anomalous increase in the number of 500-escudo notes in circulation. A detailed investigation revealed the monumental fraud. In December 1925, the Portuguese authorities, shocked by the scheme's magnitude, launched a search for Alves dos Reis and his accomplices. The complexity of the fraud and Alves dos Reis's sophisticated methods made the investigation particularly challenging. However, through meticulous analysis of documents and transactions, the authorities managed to unravel the scheme. In January 1926, Reis was arrested and brought to trial. The investigation revealed impressive details about how he had managed to deceive one of the world's most respected printing firms and the Portuguese bankers themselves. The fraud was equivalent to approximately 1% of Portugal's GDP at the time, causing a profound impact on the country's economy. During the trial, Alves dos Reis tried to defend himself by claiming that his actions were part of a plan to stabilise the economy of Angola and Portugal. However, the vast evidence of forgeries and financial manipulations led to his conviction. He was sentenced to 20 years in prison, of which he served 15. The Alves dos Reis fraud had lasting repercussions on the Portuguese economy and politics. It contributed to the financial and political instability that culminated in the May 28, 1926 coup, leading to the military dictatorship and eventually the Estado Novo regime. Banco de Portugal profoundly reformed its security processes to prevent similar frauds in the future. Alves dos Reis's story serves as an enduring reminder of the dangers of unchecked ambition and the need for rigor and integrity in the financial system. His ability to manipulate and forge documents became a case study in financial fraud, influencing reforms in banking and currency printing systems worldwide. Artur Alves dos Reis remains a fascinating and infamous figure in Portuguese history. His story is a tale of cunning and audacity, where unchecked ambition led to one of the greatest financial frauds of all time. Today, he is remembered not only as a swindler but also as an example of human ingenuity - and the risks when that ingenuity is used for ill. Lot 824

(x) American Banknote Company, Tyvek colour specimen uncut pair "10", New York, 1929 (ND 1970's), This uncut specimen pair represents a fascinating chapter in the evolution of banknote technology-an experimental issue printed by the American Bank Note Company (ABNC) using Tyvek, a synthetic polymer developed by DuPont. Produced in the 1970s, these trial notes were part of early efforts to explore alternatives to traditional cotton-based paper, driven by a growing demand for greater durability, resistance to wear, and enhanced security features. Tyvek is a non-woven material made from high-density polyethylene fibers. It is waterproof, tear-resistant, and extremely lightweight-an appealing set of characteristics for banknote production, especially in high-circulation or adverse environments. While several countries, including the United States, Costa Rica, and Haiti, experimented with Tyvek notes, most remained in the trial phase, and those that entered circulation were quickly withdrawn. Despite its initial promise, Tyvek revealed significant material limitations that ultimately prevented its widespread adoption. One of the principal issues was ink smudging. In hot and humid climates, the ink was not always securely fixed to the surface, causing the printed details to blur or run when exposed to moisture. This impaired legibility and shortened the usable life of the notes. In addition, while Tyvek was mechanically strong, it could become brittle under prolonged exposure to heat and humidity, leading to cracking and tearing-conditions that made the material unsuitable for tropical environments. The case of Haiti, one of the first countries to issue Tyvek banknotes in the early 1980s, illustrates these challenges well. The notes were withdrawn from circulation after just 18 months. Similar short-lived experiments took place in Costa Rica and the Isle of Man, reinforcing the conclusion that Tyvek-though innovative-was not viable for sustained use in circulation. Interestingly, although the notes in this pair are dated "Series of 1929," that date does not correspond to their actual production. Instead, it reflects a reused historical design drawn from ABNC's archival plates. During these experimental phases, it was common practice for the company to employ existing or classical layouts when testing new materials, avoiding the need to create entirely new engravings. The "1929" date is therefore symbolic, a nod to tradition during a period of forward-looking innovation. The ABNC played a central role in this transformative period, producing specimen and trial notes for central banks and monetary authorities worldwide. These uncut sheets were typically intended for evaluation or presentation, allowing decision-makers to assess the feasibility of alternative substrates like Tyvek. Though ultimately unsuitable for commercial issue, these experiments provided valuable lessons that informed the next generation of polymer banknote technology. Indeed, the limitations of Tyvek helped pave the way for the development of modern polymer notes, made from biaxially oriented polypropylene (BOPP)-a more stable and ink-retentive material. Today, BOPP-based banknotes are widely used in countries such as Australia, Canada, and the United Kingdom, proving that early failures can sow the seeds of lasting innovation.
