Lot 2003

Great BritainKing Edward VIIProofs and EssaysPull from an engraved sketch of the head in side profile set in an oval frame, showing the borders of the rectangular printing plate, this with the engraved initial "E.F." of Emil Fuchs, and the surrounding selvage paper signed in full by him "Emil Fuchs". Very fine and rare, it is thought only ten examples signed by Fuchs surviveNotes: The King made clear his preference for the Fuchs design over those prepared by the printers, and this would eventually be used for the final portrait. Much discussion was had over the direction of the head as can be seen from an extract of a 1901 (12 Feb.) letter from the Inland Revenue to George H. Murray housed by the Postal Museum:"“the Board would suggest that the practice usually adopted with the coinage of reversing the profile on a change of reign [...] need not be followed in the case of stamps. It appears to the Board that the profile looking to the left has advantages which render its adoption desirable, viz:- (1) that it does not seem to look out of the envelope to which the stamp is affixed”Subject to 20% VAT on Buyer’s Premium. A major rarity. Spec. M2(2)d, S.G. 218d, £20,000Notes: Only thirteen examples exist, all from a single row at the foot of a sheet with control 'H9'. While the collector's page indicates that this is ex Silkin, it is in fact the neighbouring example to the right, position five on the sheet.literature:Illustrated in 'British Postage Stamp Varieties Illustrated', R.C. Alcock and C.W. Meredith. In this publication is written: "Of the variety Kohl's "Briefmarken-Handbuch says "This variety is taken from a sheet with control letter H9 which was issued in the ordinary way in the autumn of 1909. The double printing began with the second stamp of the lowest row, with the doubling of the lower part of the design, and extended obliquely upwards so that on the last three stamps of the row the whole design is doubled, the doubling extending to the lower part of the last two stamps of the row above. There can exist, therefore, only thirteen stamps showing the double-printing - three with the whole design doubled and the other ten with the design more of less doubled"provenance:FisherSotheby's Great Britain Auction, 21 Nov. 1991, Lot 141Subject to 20% VAT on Buyer’s Premium. A fine and rare trio, the latter unusual.provenance:The complete die proof is ex 'Aurelius', Part I, Grosvenor, 21 May 2009, Lot 2192The plate proof is ex Chartwell, Spink 6 Dec. 2011, Lot 156 Notes: In the Aurelius catalogue, it is described that "This proof is particularly interesting in that it reveals De La Rue's method of construction for the new plate. In the design for the unified die eventually printed in shades of orange the white space between the previous two parts of the design had been thinned now that considerations of registrations of the two colours no longer applied. The fringe around the top and right hand side made it possible to construct most of the plate from leads struck from this die. The left and bottom fringes of the upper and lower half sheets may well have been made from separate fringe leads."Subject to 20% VAT on Buyer's Premium.
