Lot 421

Nepal, Anonymous, Tanka, undated, 'Ala-ud-Din' Type, Obv. legend Śrī Śrī in central circle, Arabic legend around, 'Abu Al-Muzafar Muham Shah 'Ala al-dunya wa-al-din as-sultan, mace with wreath above, Rev. die mostly worn flat, 10.23g, 4h (RGV 191), good fine, reverse struck from weak dies and mostly flat. Provenance: The Nicholas Rhodes Collection of Nepalese Coins and Medals: Part Two, Robert C. Senior, 1985, by private treaty. Regarding the fact that the reverses of many of the early Nepalese tangkas are worn flat, Carlo Valdettaro has suggested two explanations: 1. According to Sri Ganesh Bahur Karmacharya of Bhatgaon, such coins were struck on stone anvils and the lower face did not benefit from the action of a sharply cut die. This is a possibility and a similar technique may have been opted also for some of the worst Bengali coins we know from countermarked specimens, BUT it does not appear to solve completely the problem as there are similar "Sri Sri" coins with quite good and neat reverses; it is not at all clear how and why the obv. dies (metallic?) should have been in such good conditions and have worked so well, and the rev. dies should have been so poor and worked so ineffectively. 2. Since the earliest Buddhist times it has been considered a pious gesture to pave the floor of temples with coins. A sculpture on the railing of Bharhut Stupa (IMC) represents the scene of the banker Anathapiṇḍika purchasing the Jetavana Park in Shravasti by covering it with "crores of (punch-marked) coins" (See N.G. Majumdar: A Guide to the Sculptures in the Indian Museum, Part I, p. 46). Though I have never seen it myself, I am assured by Prof. A.N. Lahiri that many temples in India have coins embedded in their floors. We do know for certain that Chandra Shamsher Jung Bahur Rana (ruled A.D. 1901-1929) paved 'Pashupatinath' with imitation-coins struck for this particular purpose (that are still at site). We also know that coins 2 to 8 in Landon's Appendix [Landon, Perceval: Nepal, London 1928, 2 volumes.] came from Pashupati's treasure rooms, so - putting clues together - could it not be possible that some of our worn "Sri Sri" coins may have been initially used to pave Pashupatinath and have been removed and replaced after millions of pious feet had trodden on them? The main objection I have heard to this hypothesis lies in the fact that the obverses are generally in good condition and do not show traces of corrosion or accretions; but it may be replied that such coins appear (I cannot say if in all, but surely in many cases) to have been thoroughly and energetically cleaned in recent times. Carlo Valdettaro: Selection of coins from the collection of B.N. Shrestha, no. 2, Calcutta, 1968 (manuscript). In a letter of the 1980s to Nicholas Rhodes, Carlo Valdettaro reports a third explanation for the obliterated reverses of some of the early Nepalese tangkas: Some shop owners inserted a coin at one side of a wooden box which they kept on the right side of their seat and which served to keep money and valuables. Whenever they successfully concluded a transaction they rubbed the inserted coin with the fingers of their right hand. Some of these boxes may have served several generations and the exposed side of the inserted coins may have become completely effaced with time. This "hypothesis" may be less objectionable than the first two taking into account that most of the early tangka coins were melted down after about 1650 after the new Mohar standard had been introduced. Most coins which were used by shop owners as described above may have escaped the melting pot and this may explain why a considerable number of surviving tangkas have partly or completely obliterated reverses, having been kept as a kind of good luck charm in the families of shop owners a long time after the early tangkas had been demonetized. The cataloguer would like to add that a considerable number of the early tangkas have survived in Tibet and most of those which the cataloguer has seen had reverses in better condition than the reverses of the specimens which have survived in Nepal. Rhodes et al. suggest 1669 as the most likely date of issue. In that year the brother of Mahipatendra had died after being the nominal king for only a short period. Jaya Pratap Malla, who had gone on a pilgrimage to India, may have allowed this coin to be struck in honour of his son. This is one of the most attractive Malla mohars; the obverse design was copied in Tibet to produce one variety of the rare Shri Mangalamtangka, which is probably the first silver coin to be struck in Tibet.Subject to 20% VAT on Buyer's Premium. Nepal, Tribhuvan Vir Vikram Shah (1st reign, 1911-1950), Rupee (4), VS 1989 (1932), edges milled (KM 724), extremely fine to uncirculated, showing two different date styles (4)ProvenanceThe Nicholas Rhodes Collection of Nepalese Coins and Medals: Part TwoTwo of the first Rupees which were struck in Nepal (KM 724). The two figures for "9" in the date are written in two different styles. The figure "8" is written in different style when compared with the figures for "8" of the following coins (KM 723). Nicholas Rhodes reports that in 1932/3 AD the Calcutta mint supplied Kathmandu with punches for dies, and with 288 finished dies, presumably all dated VS 1989. The cataloguer believes that not all dies supplied by Calcutta were bearing a date, some must have come without date. The rupee type KM 724, dated VS 1989 may have been struck from a Calcutta die which had the date already engraved, while the rupees of the type KM 723 with the date VS 1989 were struck from Calcutta dies which did not bear a date; this was only engraved in Kathmandu with the types of figures which were normally used by the mint in Nepal. The same probably applies to the 50 paisa coins dated VS 1989 of the type KM 719 and KM 718. According to Carlo Valdettaro the fact that rupee and 50 paisa coins dated VS 1989 exist with different types of figures in the date may be attributable to the circumstance that in VS 1989 (AD 1932) the Nepalese mint at Nakku in Patan was closed and the new mint at Sundara (Dahara) in Kathmandu started operating. Hence the two different styles of the date may reflect the coinage of the old and the new mint (letter to Nicholas Rhodes, dated Calcutta, Nov. 21, 1965).Subject to 20% VAT on Buyer's Premium. The cartridges had been stored in a government warehouse. They were rediscovered by a General who had them turned over to the mint to issue coins to honour the Gurkha's service in the war. Because they are struck from used cartridges, the coins are a bit crude. The centre hole was created by the removal of the primer. They were struck only a single year, due to the limited supply of the cartridges available"Subject to 20% VAT on Buyer's Premium. For more information please view Terms and Conditions for Buyers.

This coin is remarkable for two reasons. It is the only Nepalese coin since the Licchavi period on which the title mahārājadhirāj ("great king over kings") is used and it is the first Nepalese coin with an inscription in English. In Nepal the title mahārājadhirāj is known from a scarce type of the Licchavi series, attributed to Amshuvarman, featuring a variant of this title on reverse together with a central sun symbol (RGV 17-20). In the second part of the 19th century this title was also used by Rana Prime Ministers. Subject to 20% VAT on Buyer's Premium. For more information please view Terms and Conditions for Buyers.
